

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF OKLAHOMA

DR. RACHEL TUDOR,)
)
Plaintiff,)
)
v.)	Case No. 5:15-CV-00324-C
)
SOUTHEASTERN OKLAHOMA)
STATE UNIVERSITY,)
)
and)
)
THE REGIONAL UNIVERSITY) SYSTEM OF OKLAHOMA,)
)
)
Defendants.)

PLAINTIFF DR. RACHEL TUDOR'S
OPPOSED MOTION TO SUPPLEMENT ECF No. 279

Pursuant to Local Rule 7.1(k) Dr. Tudor moves to supplement her earlier filed motion for reconsideration of reinstatement, or, in the alternative, front pay (ECF No. 279) with additional materials pertinent to the reinstatement remedy which were unavailable at the time of filing.

BACKGROUND

Dr. Tudor prevailed at her jury trial on two counts of discrimination and one count of retaliation (ECF No. 262). Tudor desires to be reinstated to Southeastern Oklahoma State University (“Southeastern”) as an Associate Professor with tenure in the English, Humanities, and Languages Department (“English Department”).

Previous requests and briefing on reinstatement. On December 11, 2017, Tudor submitted a timely motion requesting reinstatement (ECF No. 268). At the time, Tudor presented new evidence and pointed to record evidence showing that she is legally entitled to reinstatement and that there are no extreme hostilities at Southeastern precluding reinstatement.

On January 29, 2018, the Court denied reinstatement (ECF No. 275). The Order turned in part on the finding that (1) English Department Chair Dr. Randy Prus expressed concerns regarding Tudor’s scholarly productivity in the past (id. at 4), (2) that Defendants represented to the Court that Tudor “does not appear to have published anything in the last six years” (id.), and (3) if Tudor were to return to Southeastern without additional publications that the environment might be hostile because Tudor may be considered “unworthy” (id.). The Order’s findings of fact heavily relied upon representations made by Dr. Randy Prus via declaration (ECF No. 270-15). See generally ECF No. 275 at 3–4 (repeatedly referencing representations made in the Prus declaration).

On February 9, 2018, Dr. Tudor requested that the Court reconsider reinstatement as a remedy (ECF No. 276). In her request, Tudor pointed to findings of fact inconsistent with the record (id. at 1–16), conflicts with binding precedent (id. at 16–21), and equitable considerations (id. at 21–25) meriting reconsideration. Therein, Tudor also advised of changes in circumstance (id. at 25), including Tudor’s plans to submit articles for publication.

On February 12, 2018, the Court denied Tudor’s request for reconsideration of reinstatement (ECF No. 278). In its Order, the Court observed that Tudor’s reconsideration motion did not present new arguments or evidence in support of reinstatement (id.).

On February 27, 2017, Tudor moved for reconsideration of reinstatement again and moved in the alternative for front pay (ECF No. 279).

On March 12, 2018, Tudor moved to supplement her motion for reconsideration of reinstatement or, in the alternative front pay (ECF No. 280). In that motion, Tudor sought to add three exhibits all of which show that there were no extreme hostilities at Southeastern precluding reinstatement at this time. That motion is still pending.

RELIEF REQUESTED

Dr. Tudor wishes to supplement her earlier filed motion requesting reconsideration of reinstatement (ECF No. 279). Tudor desires to present the Court with additional evidence, not previously available, which shows that Tudor is a productive scholar and thus the Court's previous finding that Tudor's return to Southeastern is impossible because she would be deemed "unworthy" due to her publication dry spell should be revisited. Tudor also desires to present the Court with new evidence which calls into question the accuracy of (and ultimately, the weight that should be afforded to) representations made by Dr. Randy Prus via sworn declaration in connection with Dr. Tudor's bid for reinstatement.

Specifically, Tudor wishes to present the following exhibits and accompanying arguments:

New Scholarship and Service. On March 19, 2018, Tudor received notice that an article she submitted to Language, Literature, and Interdisciplinary Studies—a peer review journal—was published. A true and accurate copy of Tudor's published article is attached hereto as Exhibit 1. Tudor's article, entitled "Exiles in Our Own Land: Native American Novelists," is twenty-three (23) formatted pages in length. Additionally, on March 19, 2018, Tudor received a certificate confirming her service as a peer reviewer from the editor of Language, Literature, and Interdisciplinary Studies. (Tudor served as a peer reviewer of an article written by another professor submitted for consideration to the journal.) A true and accurate copy of the certificate Tudor received is attached hereto as Exhibit 2.

Tudor believes that this new evidence is relevant to this Court's reconsideration of reinstatement because Exhibit 1 speaks to Tudor's scholarly productivity and Exhibit 2 speaks to Tudor's continued service, in a scholarly capacity, to her profession.

In initially denying reinstatement, the Court found that Dr. Prus' past concerns about Tudor's publication frequency, in light of Tudor's publication dry spell, may lead Prus and others at Southeastern to deem Tudor to be "unworthy" if she were to return to Southeastern (ECF No. 275 at 4). However, Tudor's latest article should allay any concerns about such hostilities. Plainly, there is no reason to deem Tudor "unworthy" due to her publication dry spell since, as Exhibit 1 evidences, the dry spell is over. Tudor's service as a peer reviewer for an academic journal, as Exhibit 2 shows, should similarly allay any concerns regarding Tudor's continued capacity for scholarly service to her profession.

Southeastern job announcement. On March 16, 2018, the undersigned discovered that Southeastern's English Department posted an advertisement seeking applications for a new tenure-track position to teach, inter alia, "World Literature, Humanities, and/or Writing courses." A true and accurate copy of the advertisement is attached hereto as Exhibit 3.

Tudor believes this new evidence is relevant to this Court's reconsideration of reinstatement because Exhibit 3 calls into question the overall accuracy of representations made in the Prus declaration (ECF No. 270-15), which the Court relied upon in initially denying reinstatement.

Key components of the Prus declaration directly conflict with Exhibit 3. For example, the Prus declaration indicates that Tudor should not be reinstated because the English Department does not have a need for any additional professors and there is no budget for additional professors of any kind in the Department.¹ Yet, Exhibit 3 shows that the English Department presently seeks to hire a new professor to teach a wide swath of classes in the Department, including categories of classes that Tudor formerly taught at Southeastern.

Given the centrality of the Prus declaration to the reinstatement question, and the irreconcilable conflicts between the Prus declaration and Exhibit 3, the Court should revisit whether Defendants have met their burden of showing that Tudor's reinstatement is in fact infeasible. Defendants purported to satisfy their evidentiary burden almost solely via proffer of the Prus declaration. Defendants also repeatedly invited the Court to discount Tudor's other evidence which conflicted with the Prus declaration, arguing that the Court should rely on Prus' knowledge of the English

¹ See ECF No. 270-15 ¶ 4 (Declaration of Dr. Prus: "As the current Chair of the EHL Department at Southeastern Oklahoma State University, part of my duties involves assigning faculty members to teach certain classes and subjects. At present, there is no need for an additional professor, let alone an additional tenured professor, in the EHL Department. Further, there is no available budget for an additional professor.").

Department and its needs and Prus' supposed penchant for accuracy and good judgment.² However, the irreconcilable conflicts between the Prus declaration and Exhibit 3 counsel in favor of reweighing the Prus declaration. At minimum, Exhibit 3 is strong evidence that discrete portions of the Prus declaration are inaccurate, which warrants discounting otherwise uncorroborated portions of the same. See, e.g., NLRB v. Pittsburgh S.S. Co., 337 U.S. 656, 659 (1949) (“Thus, in the determination of litigated facts, the testimony of one who has been found unreliable as to one issue may properly be accorded little weight as to the next.”).

DEFENDANTS' OPPOSITION

Counsel for Dr. Tudor notified counsel for Defendants about their intent to file this Motion via email on March 19, 2018 and requested Defendants' position as well as a rationale for opposition if opposed. Defendants' counsel, Ms. Kindy Jones, responded via email that same day that Defendants oppose this Motion. No rationale for Defendants' opposition was provided.

² See, e.g., ECF No. 270 at 6 (“No one else in this litigation has the benefit of the insights held by Dr. Prus. Trust Dr. Randy Prus' professional judgment.”); ECF No. 274 at 3 (“Dr. Prus' quiet, but direct evidence, offered in a peaceful but unrefuted way, should be given more weight than [evidence presented by Tudor].”).

Dated: March 19, 2018

/s/ Ezra Young
Ezra Young (NY Bar No. 5283114)
Law Office of Ezra Young
30 Devoe, 1a
Brooklyn, NY 11211
P: 949-291-3185
F: 917-398-1849
ezraiyoung@gmail.com

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that on March 19, 2018, I electronically filed a copy of the foregoing with the Clerk of Court by using the CM/ECF system, which will automatically serve all counsel of record.

/s/ Ezra Young
Ezra Young (NY Bar No. 5283114)

Exhibit 1

Language, Literature, and Interdisciplinary Studies (LLIDS)

ISSN: 2457-0044

Exiles in Our Own Land: Native American Novelists

Rachel Tudor

Today I couldn't handle the pain of being an American Indian—Melanie Fey (Dine); As Indigenous women writers and artists we are continually trying to exist, live, and love in a world that doesn't always show its love for us—Tanaya Winder (Duckwater Shoshone); Even during a time of reconciliation, Indigenous people are faced with having to defend their identities from being mocked, used as a trend or form of entertainment every single day—Jessica Deer (Mohawk); As an Indigenous person, I have to escape in order to survive, but I don't just escape. I hold this beautiful, rich Indigenous decolonial space inside and around me—Leanne Simpson (Michi Saagiig Nishnaabeg) from #NotYourPrincess (2017).

Native Americans experience a sense of separation from other Americans because we fail to subscribe to the myth of America as an immigrant nation. Many of us live with a feeling of uprootedness because our people were relocated at gunpoint from our ancestral homelands and we often have to migrate to urban areas for employment. We experience a sense of foreignness when we try to explain our cultural values to our neighbours. In mainstream American literature and culture, we are always portrayed as the Other—from sensationalized “Captivity Narratives” to Frederick Jackson Turner’s paradigmatic “Frontier Thesis” to Hollywood’s The Searchers—Americans define themselves by their war against us.

Our sense of being exiles in our own land is institutionalized in American master narratives about nation, race, class, gender, language, and sexuality. Colonial and Neocolonial definitions of these fundamental ontological and epistemological concepts constitute a ubiquity of oppression by the dominant classes. Native American authors, however, have created a form of novelistic dialogue that challenge these dominant conceptualizations and expose them as mere forms of enforced cultural hegemony. In addition, Native American authors use the novel as a tool to facilitate their own affirming self-transformation and to gestate the seeds of self-transformation in fellow Native American readers while simultaneously welcoming non-Native readers to become “woke.”

The novel, as defined by Lukács, is the form of narrative that develops in a culture after "beauty" ceases to be "the meaning of the world made visible" (Theory 34), before the soul

"knows it can lose itself, [before] it thinks of looking for itself" (30). Specifically, "what is given form [in the novel] is not the totality of life but the artist's relationship with that totality, his approving or condemnatory attitude towards it" (53). Unfortunately, authors cannot create a new totality with their words, "however high the subject may rise above its objects and take them into its sovereign possession, they are still and always only isolated objects, whose sum can never equal a real totality" (53). For Native Americans living in this locus (contemporary North America) and time (the present) "loneliness has become a problem unto itself, deepening and confusing the tragic problem and ultimately taking its place...such loneliness is...the torment of a creature condemned to solitude and devoured by a longing for community" (45). This is poignantly demonstrated in Native American authored novels by James Welch in The Death of Jim Loney, N. Scott Momaday in House Made of Dawn, Louise Erdrich in The Round House, Leslie Silko in Ceremony, and Thomas King in Medicine River among many others. In addition, Native American novels also often contain the characteristic quest motif, a hero who searches for meaning, for totality, that is no longer immanent (60). Significantly, the "problematic individual" and the "contingent world" are the hallmarks of the novel (78) as described by Lukács in general but particularly of novels by Native Americans.

According to Lukács, "The inner form of the novel has been understood as the process of the problematic individual's journeying towards himself...towards clear self-recognition" (80). And, "The immanence of meaning which the form of the novel requires lies in the hero's finding out through experience that a mere glimpse of meaning is the highest that life has to offer" (80). These characteristics sound remarkably like plot summaries of many contemporary Native American novels. Consequently, the real tension in contemporary Native American novels is between the integrating totality of our not too distant past, which is still a part of our living memory, and the fractured existence of our everyday lives. As a matter of fact, Leslie Silko's novels Ceremony and Almanac of the Dead may even be termed "post-tribal epics," ala Giorgio Mariani, because they are tied to some other-world totality.

However, many Native American novels emphasize a historical component that allows the Native American reader to reflect on their lost homes and civilization as well as exposing the real causes of their unarticulated feelings of loss and alienation in concrete and tangible ways. Thus, allowing individual Native readers to become conscious of the true origins of their anomie. The resulting detachment from dominant cultural discourse enables Native readers to critique oppressive systems and critically reflect on their sense of self, self-worth, and liberate themselves from self-destructive ideation. Ideally, the "woke" reader will generate their own liberating counter-narratives from their own particular vantage point. Non-Native readers of indigenous novels will also be liberated from an irrational and ahistorical conceptualization of American civilization and be able to be full partners and friends in the land and conceptual space we share.

In order to understand Native American literature, it is necessary to be aware of and listen to Native American literary critics. It is not only counterproductive but also injurious to try to understand and explicate Native American literature using conventions, practices, assumptions, and techniques that have long served to oppress the very voices and narratives that constitute Native American literature. For example, non-Native literary critic Christina Patterson agrees with Louise Erdrich's The Last Report on the Miracles at Little Horse that "clearly we are in the realm of magical realism; where the wilder reaches of Catholicism mingle with the hopes and dreams of a community whose traditions are in disarray and where the search for rigid classifications—saint, sinner, or miracle—is doomed to collapse in the face of messy reality" (9 March 2002). Well, she does get some things right: Erdrich's novel does address a community in disarray and her narrative does challenge the rigid classifications of the dominant society. However, the critical template of magical realism is anathema to understanding the text on its own terms. Magical realism is a form of literary criticism that colonizes instead of explicates.

Rachel Tudor

To understand why magical realism is a form of literary criticism that colonizes instead of explicates, we have to take a look at its origin. While many articles and books have been written on the topic of magical realism, and some are not as racist as others, it is important to keep in mind that the atavistic origin of magical realism is found in a seminal text on the subject by Amaryll Chanady published in 1985. In Magical Realism and the Fantastic: Resolved Versus Unresolved Antinomy, Chanady asserts that a dichotomous way of thinking is expressed in magical realism, which she juxtaposes as the so-called "primitive," "archaic" American Indian mentality and the mentality of the "erudite," "rational," "empirical," "super-civilization" of Europe.

Chanady's racist theory of narrative also assumes an exclusive white Western reader for magical realist narratives. White reader's sensibilities, she asserts, will not be challenged because "the reader considers the represented world as alien" and because of the "impossibility of complete reader identification in the case of a Magico-Realist work about American Indians" (163). She claims that "while the [white] reader accepts the unconventional world view [of the American Indian], he does so only within the contexts of the fictitious world, and does not integrate it in his own perception of reality" (163). In critical parlance, Chanady is referring to the focalizer in narrative. In magical realism, for example, the focalizer is European: "The Indians are the object, not the subject, of focalization" (35).

It is important to always ask, "Whose point of view is being expressed?" Chanady is correct to note who a reader is supposed to identify with but is in error in assuming that a non-Native reader will be unable to identify with a Native American character. In Native American novels "Indians" are the subjects, not the object, of focalization. Thus, it is erroneous to use the critical template of magical realism with its attendant racist suppositions to describe or interpret novels by Native Americans. As a matter of fact, the term "magical realism" may only accurately be used to describe a text about Native Americans authored by non-Indians and wherein the indigenous characters are presented as objects instead of subjects. As Mohawk author Jessica Deer writes in #NotYourPrincess, every single day "indigenous people are faced with having to defend their identities from being mocked, used as trend or form of entertainment" (Charleyboy 61).

M. Annette Jaimes' The State of Native America: Genocide, Colonization, and Resistance, suggests that denying the subject status of indigenous people is why acclaimed and Nobel Prize winning non-Native authors of magical realism (strictly defined according to Chanady's paradigm) have ignored and at times even facilitated the destruction of indigenous people and communities. How did Colombian novelist Gabriel Garcia Marquez fail to note the destruction of indigenous communities by the Colombian government? Where are the crimes Mexico committed against indigenous people documented in Mexican writer Juan Rulfo's oeuvre? More damning is Guatemalan literary giant Miguel Ángel Asturias, who as an official of the Guatemalan government, participated in the razing of Maya villages. Many of Chile's Isabelle Allende's fans may be surprised to find her labeling the indigenous population of her country as "placidly evil" (430-2). Edward Said warns that the "fictional myopia of the real-life suffering of real-life people is simply a continuing white tradition" (55-62).

Although Chanady claims magical realism to be the product of the synthesis of the dialectical relationship between two civilizations, she assumes an exclusive non-Native audience and that Native people will be portrayed as objects, not subjects. In the twenty-first century these racist, unscientific, and irrational aspersions as a foundational theory of literature is simply unacceptable. Because of the inclusion of non-white, non-Western writers and scholars we now know that all people are capable of rational and irrational thought, rational and irrational behavior, and empirical and metaphysical reasoning. No longer may people and races be said to be stereotypically reduced to one or the other. In fact, Chanady's characterization of mental capabilities according to race may be characterized as not simply racist but racist and we cannot use a template based on assumptions about the superiority of one race and civilization over another to explicate Native American texts or non-Western texts. The template and the resulting interpretation are not only erroneous, but underpin dominant concepts that enforce a sense of exile and inferiority on Native American readers while reinforcing the non-Native readers' sense of superiority and dominance.

I am not proposing that we dismiss Western literary criticism in totality. Just as I am not suggesting that Native American storytellers reject the novel for more traditional forms of storytelling. For instance, some of Chanady's critical analysis is not based on race or presumed civilizational hierarchies and is, indeed, helpful. She writes: "The mystery of life does not exist in objective reality, but in the subjective reaction to and interpretation of the world...the amalgamation of realism and fantasy is the means to an end, and this is the penetration of the mystery of reality" (27).

A number of Native American literary critics have proposed a number of ways to really look (non-myopic) at indigenous novels. These are not, as a body of texts, a rejection of rigorous critique or shunning of the integration of scientific literary analysis. Indeed, they, like the Native American novel, are a syncretic cultural manifestation that is dialogical and original, a balm to the centuries-old injuries of the indigenous civilization currently sharing America. For example, Native American authors, storytellers and critics, generally share the mimetic school of literary criticism's view that literature has the power to heal and that moral values that create a sense of mutual care and responsibility through generating empathy and understanding of the cares and pains of other knowing selves are a necessary component of literature. It does this by embracing a realist and subjective aesthetic, the application of realistic historical and experiential sensibilities, and the careful listening for voices embedded in the narrative. Likewise, many Native American authors embrace the postmodern aesthetic of suspending disbelief, fabulation, and an intransitive form of writing inasmuch as it does not really resolve or come together in any finite or circumscribed way. In addition, the postmodern is multi-vocal and polyglot, rejecting any overriding single conception of reality or being in favour of a process of constant discovery and re-creation—a reflection of the incredible diversity of indigenous America.

Rachel Tudor

Native American novelists embracing a spirit of constant discovery and re-creation is necessary for a revitalization of American literature. American literature and criticism are sorely in need of new points of views and ideas. As early as 1967 John Barth claims in his essay "The Literature of Exhaustion" that conventional forms, genres and modes, are "used up" and their possibilities exhausted. Unfortunately, his essay has been widely misinterpreted to mean that literature itself is exhausted. However, as he subsequently explained in his 1979—admittedly, a long pause—essay, "The Literature of Replenishment," he simply means that new forms of writing, specifically what he terms postmodernist fiction, need to be developed. It is time to welcome America's indigenous authors to participate. Bakhtin wrote in Formal that "New means of representation force us to see new aspects of visible reality"(134). Unfortunately, Native American contributions have yet to be commonly accepted or used by non-Native scholars and rarely, if ever, used by mainstream book reviewers. And, how can Native American contributions to literature be fully appreciated if there is not a corresponding working theory of criticism by which to evaluate, interpret, and appreciate the texts?

Harold Schweizer's book Suffering and the Remedy of Art encourages authors and readers to reconsider the aesthetics of the novel. It is about "wounds that will not close despite the sutures, scarring, and bandaging, the patchwork and layering of literary technique" (1). Although Schweizer does not examine Native American literature per se, Native American novels demonstrate the power of his thesis. As he explains: "In the experience of suffering the ideology of objectivity, the claims of reason and knowledge, are called into question. Philosophical distinctions of body and spirit, sensation and intellect, the universal and the particular, the physical and the metaphysical, no longer apply" (2).

Also consider, for example, two novels by Pulitzer Prize winning author N. Scott Momaday (Kiowa): House Made of Dawn and The Ancient Child. The Ancient Child is the chronicle of a man's journey into madness, facilitated by a world of broken connections and other wounded people, particularly, a tragically wounded young woman, Grey. And, Abel, the protagonist in House Made of Dawn, is alone and silent at the end of the novel, just as he is at the beginning: "He was alone and running on... There was no sound, and he had no voice; he had only the words of a song" (Momaday, House 191). Abel may have the words to the song of healing, but pointedly he is unable to articulate them, the word remains unspoken. Many non-Native authors, however, remark on Abel and Set's respective triumphs—when the characters are, in fact, tropes of the idea that the average Native American can triumph in America.

Abel's (House Made of Dawn) and Set's (The Ancient Child) underlying problem is that they do not know who their fathers are and, consequently, do not know who they are either. Critics have long neglected the fact that the father is absent in almost every contemporary Native American novel, which, it should be noted, stands in stark contrast to the stereotypical American novel in which it is not the absent father, but a dominating father that is ubiquitous. Thus, The Ancient Child and House Made of Dawn are really novels of suffering, but not futile suffering if it awakens a reader's consciousness and conscience. Novels of suffering may perform their function of raising consciousness by reducing the "distances among writer, text, what is written about, and finally, the reader, [so they] all converge on a single point " (Lang xii).

N.Scott Momaday cites his mentor Yvor Winters' assertion that: "Unless we understand the history which produced us, we are determined by that history; we may be determined in any event, but the understanding gives us a chance" (Schubnell xvi). Schubnell describes Momaday's writing as "a way to create an understanding of self and history through language" (xvi). On another occasion, Momaday claims his "authority to write about the Indian world" is "based upon experience" (Isernhagen 52).

Native American authors often provide non-Native focalizers for non-Natives that embrace the universality of many of our experiences, particularly experiences of suffering. For example, Milly, in House Made of Dawn, is a fully-developed character with a voice and an attitude. In many ways she is the white, female equivalent of Abel. She has her own broken connections. Like Abel, she, too, has lost her father and mother and child (granting for the moment that Peter is Abel's child). She grew up watching her father "beaten by the land" and daily going into the fields "without hope," until the day he put her on a bus and told her goodbye, and she never saw him again (114-5). And, then she lost her four-year-old daughter, Carrie. As Schweizer explains, in his book's thesis "the experience of suffering the ideology of objectivity, the claims of reason and knowledge, are called into question." (2).

While there is truth to Schweizer's conclusion about suffering being universal, suffering is not necessarily individualized and ahistorical—it is also communal and historical. For example, the passage from the beginning of Louise Erdrich's (Anishinaabe) Tracks strikes a familiar chord with many Native Americans because it is part of our shared history:

We started dying before the snow, and like the snow, we continued to fall. It was surprising there were so many of us left to die. For those who survived the spotted sickness from the south, our long flights west...then a wind from the east, bringing exile in a storm of government papers...by then we thought disaster must surely have spent its force, that disease must have claimed all of the Anishinabe that the earth could hold and bury. But the earth is limitless and so is luck and so were our people once (1).

Likewise, Linda Hogan (Chickasaw) describes the phenomenon eloquently in her novel Power: "History is the place where the Spanish cut off the hands of my ancestors. The Spanish who laughed at our desperation and dying, and I wish it didn't but history still terrifies me so that I dream it in dreams with skies the color of green bottle glass" (73).

Unflinching realism is vital in Native American novels. It is only through realism that readers are able to "accept the concept of the complete human personality as the social and historical task humanity has to solve; only if we regard it as the vocation of art to depict the most important turning-point of this process with all the wealth of the factors affecting it; only if aesthetics assign to art the role of explorer and guide, can the content of life be systematically divided into spheres of greater and lesser importance” (Lukács 7).

Rachel Tudor

According to Bakhtin a shared view of the world between author and reader, the realist aesthetic or verisimilitude, is then the underlying goal of all socially relevant fiction (135). Jessica Deer (Mohawk) writes, “the highly inaccurate and dehumanizing representations of Indigenous peoples in sports, on television, on the runway, or in costumes on the shelves of a Halloween store shape much of what people know and think about us...and that affects how society understands the real social, political, and economic issues we face” (Charleyboy 61). In other words, meaning matters for the author, the reader, and society. The question then becomes a matter of whose meanings and of what matters. Rodney Livingstone writes that for Lukács what we see is appearance, whereas the great novelist reveals the driving forces of history which are invisible to actual consciousness (12). In other words, it is the author's job to enable the reader to see through the "veils of reification" that blind one's vision of one's true self and one's true relation to other selves.

Lukács's form of realism involves a genuine love for humanity and a thirst for life. For example, he writes that without "love for humanity and life in general, something that necessarily involves the deepest hatred for a society, classes and their representatives who humiliate and deform human beings, it is impossible for any genuinely major realism to develop" (Essays 148). It is also vital to remember that “the tremendous social power of literature consists in the fact that it depicts the human being directly and with the full richness of his inward and outward life” (Essays 143). In doing so, a good critic will, in Momaday's words, "enable us to better understand literature," and "show us things that we might not see for ourselves" (Isernhagen 58).

The type of realism that Lukács advocates and those Native American authors aspire to is impossible without including numerous authentic and embodied voices in the text. Bakhtin's term for this is Heteroglossia. Chickasaw poet Linda Hogan explains this concept in her poem, “Tear”: “I remember the women/Tonight they walk/out from the shadows/with black dogs/children, the dark heavy horses/and the worn-out men/ They walk inside me. This blood/is a map of the road between us/I am why they survived . . . I am the tear between them/and both sides live” (Charleyboy 14). These voices, sometimes referred to by Bakhtin as languages, are the result of real, lived experiences, personal, communal, historical, that culminate in various particular world-views that are expressed in the words, syntax, metaphors, grammar, and tone of a speaking subject that is, more or less, conscious of his or her subjectivity, or beingness vis-à-vis other beings.

Native American novels are also frequently polyphonic. Polyphony is closely related to heteroglossia, even sometimes confused with heteroglossia. Polyphony refers to a plurality of consciousnesses (Morson 238), not simply languages. In addition, these consciousnesses represent the lived life experiences of embodied voices. Hunkpapa Lakota author Tiffany Midge expresses the concept this way, “When I think of a model of Indigenous womanhood, I immediately think of my mother: a woman who lost her own mother when she was sixteen, became a widow at twenty-one with a baby girl, and no education or prospects...I also think of my grandma Eliza, a woman who grew up dirt poor, who scraped out a living, her clothes threadbare through long, cold winters spent eating the same meal" (Charleyboy 67).

N. Scott Momaday (Kiowa) explains a similar phenomenon as a process of learning, sometimes long after publication, "what's really going on" (Abbott 30). He explains: "When a man is writing, he is operating on two levels: he writes out of his consciousness and out of his unconsciousness. And very many times he will not, after the fact, know all about his writing" (30). He explains in a later interview with Gretchen Bataille that while writing there are things he understood "on one level and ha[s] come to understand on a different level and will again in the future understand on yet another level" (63). Along these same lines, Momaday consistently refuses to answer what happens to Abel after the end of the novel House Made of Dawn. His typical response is, "your idea is as good as mine" (Bonnetti 140): indicating that Abel has an existence independent of the author which somehow occurs through the dynamic process of storytelling (Bonetti 131).

False consciousness or inauthentic voices are also a concern for Native American authors. For instance, Greg Sarris (Miwok) warns of his struggle with a false consciousness in Keeping Slug Woman Alive, a Fanonian (Frantz Fanon's The Wretched of the Earth) consciousness of internal colonization manifested through self-destructive behavior and self-loathing. Hayles worries that the "disintegration of the subject [authentic consciousness] will precipitate a crisis in representation which makes a traditional novel impossible to write" (Chaos 256). However, we should also keep in mind what Sholes notes in Structural Fabulation, "in its cognitive function, fiction helps us to know ourselves and our existential situation" (5).

The realism of Native American novels gives added poignancy to the so-called magical element which is not magical at all. As explained, use of the term 'magical', as opposed to the more accurate ascription of the considered use of postmodern sensibilities and strategies by Native American authors to subvert hegemonic cultural discourses in reference to Native American history, ontology, and epistemology, is fallacious and harmful. N. Katherine Hayles warns us that "theories about language which claim that it is free to be interpreted in any way whatsoever are the allies and precursors of state terrorism" (Chaos 126). Native Americans have a long experience with state terrorism and it is known as colonialism.

Critics who fail to make the distinction between magical realism and postmodern sensibilities fail to recognize the conceptual ecology of Native American novels. According to Stanislaw Lem a "conceptual ecology" is one in which within any given conceptual space, which he calls a topology, certain forms are facilitated while others are suppressed. The "particularities of history and personality determine which actually appear and which are repressed. All forms that are realized...are linked to each other by the common attributes that define the space" (Hayles, Chaos 185). The contemporary Native American novel is an emergent form and the product of a literary community with a common socio-historical experience and facing similar epistemological and ontological challenges to their survival.

Instead of labeling Thomas King's (Cherokee) Green Grass, Running Water as magical realism, let's take the postmodern anti-realist elements in the novel seriously. If we do, we see that his novel reveals the absurdity of life, of history; moreover, we often cannot make sense of them, and the harder we try, the greater fools we make of ourselves. For instance, just as the witnesses' differing descriptions of the tricksters vary from observer to observer to observer in Green Grass, Running Water, our perception of reality and anti-reality varies. Despite the posturing and polemics of King's characters, in the end chaos and uncertainty, angst, and purposelessness appears to rule the universe and drives what we call history. It is comic only in the sense that it is a maniacal laugh into the maw of the abyss. Similarly, Linda Hogan's (Chickasaw) Pulitzer Prize nominated Mean Spirit contains a minor character that the reader is asked to believe is a ghost. However, Mean Spirit is not a ghost story. The ghost is there to present a meta-textual perspective on historical events.

Rachel Tudor

Unfortunately, Native American authors are often exiles from the dominant literary community of America. Literary critics and fellow novelists who should be our allies are sometimes our enemies. For instance, in W.J. Stuckey's The Pulitzer Prize Novels: A Critical Backward Look, Stuckey claims Momaday was awarded the Pulitzer Prize, not because of merit, but because 1969 "was not a year remarkable for good fiction" (226). He does not cite any of the committee members to support his malign claim. Stuckey's explication of the novel reduces the symbolism, the allegorical functions, and the interpersonal implications of the characters and actions to one single, simple metaphor with the purpose of blaming the white man. Stuckey claims that the scene between Abel and the "white woman" (tellingly, Stuckey does not ever use her name) is an "obvious" metaphor for the corruption of Indians by white society. However, Abel has affairs with two white women: Angela Grace St. John and Milly. Although Angela Grace St. John exploits Abel, Milly represents a clear opportunity for Abel to make a vital, loving connection, which he lamentably fails to seize.

It seems difficult for Stuckey to imagine Momaday as anything but a simple Indian. He repeatedly uses the word "pretentious" in reference to Momaday. However, it should be noted that pretentious means pretending, make-believe, playing-at, in essence Stuckey's aspersion is not a literary one, but a pejorative personal one, one of character: Momaday is an Indian playing at being an author, he is only pretending, imitating, mimicking, being a writer.

As a Chickasaw PhD candidate I almost asked a professor to be a member of my dissertation committee who shared Stuckey's attitude. Fortunately, a white friend informed me that when he told this professor that he selected Native American literature as the focus of his studies, this professor asked him: "You are smart, why don't you study real literature?" Until these attitudes change, Native Americans will continue to be exiles in our own land. A good beginning is to accept Native Americans as equals. Take Indigenous voices and literature seriously. Invite Native Americans to be participants and partners.

Works Cited

- Bakhtin, M.M. and P.N. Medvedev. The Formal Method in Literary Scholarship. Trans. Albert J. Wehrle. John Hopkins UP, 1978.
- Barth, John. The Friday Book: Essays and Other Nonfiction. New York: Putnam, 1984.
- , Further Fridays: Essays, Lectures, and Other Nonfiction 1984-94. Little, Brown and Company, 1995.
- Bataille, Gretchen. Interview with N. Scott Momaday. Conversations with N. Scott Momaday. Ed. Matthias Schubnell. Jackson: Mississippi UP, 1997. 57-66.
- Bonetti, Kay. Interview with N. Scott Momaday. Conversations with N. Scott Momaday. Ed. Matthias Schubnell. Mississippi UP, 1997.130-148.
- Chanady, Amaryll Beatrice. Magical Realism and the Fantastic: Resolved Versus Unresolved Antinomy. Garland, 1985.
- Charleyboy, Lisa and Mary Beth Leatherdale, editors. #NotYourPrincess” Voices of Native American Women. Annick Press, 2017.
- Erdrich, Louise. The Antelope Wife. Harper, 1998.
- , The Last Report on the Miracles at Little No Horse. Harper, 2001.
- , LaRose. Harper, 2016.
- , A Plague of Doves. Harper, 2008.
- , The Round House. Harper, 2012.
- , Shadow Tag. Harper, 2010.
- , Tracks. Holt, 1988.
- Fanon, Frantz. The Wretched of the Earth. Groove, 1963.
- Hayles, N. Katherine. Chaos Bound: Orderly Disorder in Contemporary Literature and Science. Cornell UP, 1990.

Rachel Tudor

---, How We Became Posthuman: Virtual Bodies in Cybernetics, Literature, and Informatics. Chicago UP, 1999.

Hogan, Linda. Mean Spirit. Ivy Books, 1991.

---. Power. Norton, 1998.

Isernhagen, Hartwig. Momaday, Vizenor, Armstrong: Conversations on American Indian Writing. Oklahoma UP, 1999.

---, "N. Scott Momaday and the Use(s) of Modernism: Some Remarks on the Example of Yvor Winters." In Aspects of Modernism. Ed. Andreas Fischer, Martin Heusser, and Thomas Hermann. Gunter Narr Verlag, 1997. 313-328.

Jaimes, M. Annette, editor. The State of Native America: Genocide, Colonization, and Resistance. South End Press, 1991.

Kent, Thomas. Interpretation and Genre: The Role of Generic Perception in the Study of Narrative Texts. Bucknell UP, 1986.

King, Thomas. Green Grass, Running Water. Houghton, 1993.

---, Medicine River. 1989. Penguin, 1995.

King, Tom. "MELUS Interview: N. Scott Momaday—Literature and the Native Writer." Conversations with N. Scott Momaday. Ed. Matthias Schubnell. Jackson: Mississippi UP, 1997. 149-156.

Lukács, Georg. Contemporary Realism. Trans. John and Necke Mander. Merlin Press, 1963.

---, Essays on Realism. Trans. David Fernbach. MIT UP, 1980.

---, Studies in European Realism: A Sociological Survey of the Writings of Balzac, Stendhal, Zola, Tolstoy, Gorki, and Others. Trans. Edith Bone. Hillway, 1950.

---, Theory of the Novel. Trans. Anna Bostock. Merlin Press, 1971.

Mariani, Giorgio. Post-Tribal Epics: The Native American Novel Between Tradition and Modernity. Edwin Mellen, 1996.

Momaday, N. Scott. The Ancient Child. Harper Perennial, 1990.

---, House Made of Dawn. Signet, 1969.

---, In the Presence of the Sun: Stories and Poems, 1961-1991. St. Martin, 1992.

---, Man Made of Words. St. Martin's, 1997.

---, The Names: A Memoir. Sun Tracks: An American Indian Literary Series. 16. Arizona UP, 1976.

Morson, Gary Saul and Caryl Emerson. Mikhail Bakhtin: Creation of a Prosiacs. Stanford UP, 1990.

Patterson, Christina. Review of Louise Erdrich's The Last Report on the Miracles at Little No Horse. Harper, 2001. 9 March 2002 www.Independent.co.uk.

Persona. "Shouting at the Machine: An Interview with N. Scott Momaday." Conversations with N. Scott Momaday. Ed. Matthias Schubnell. Mississippi UP, 1997. 111-129.

Schubnell, Matthais, Introduction. Conversations with N. Scott Momaday. Ed. Matthias Schubnell. Mississippi UP, 1997. ix-xx

Schwartz, Sanford. The Matrix of Modernism: Pound, Eliot, and Early 20th. Century Thought. Princeton UP, 1985.

Schweizer, Harold. Suffering and the Remedy of Art. SUNY UP, 1997.

Silko, Leslie. Almanac of the Dead. Penguin. 1992.

---, Ceremony. Penguin, 1977.

Weiler, Dagmar. "N. Scott Momaday: Storyteller." Conversations with N. Scott Momaday. Ed. Matthias Schubnell. Mississippi UP, 1997. 168-177.

Welch, James. The Death of Jim Loney. Penguin, 1987.

---, Fools Crow. Viking Penguin, 1987.

---, Winter in the Blood. Penguin, 1986.

Exhibit 2

Language, Literature, and Interdisciplinary Studies (LLIDS)

ISSN: 2457-0044

In recognition of the contribution in the peer review process of
LANGUAGE, LITERATURE, AND INTERDISCIPLINARY STUDIES (LLIDS)
VOLUME 1 ISSUE 3

We thank Rachel Tudor for peer reviewing a paper in the Spring 2018 Issue of LLIDS.

Scholarly contribution of peer reviewers entails specialized knowledge and skills. Their sustained efforts account for the efficient selection of research papers and maintaining the quality of published academic work. We thank the concerned person for responsibly partaking in the peer review process of the journal.

Deeksha Suri

Deeksha Suri

Editor, LLIDS

Exhibit 3

Future Students | Current Students | Alumni & Friends | Faculty & Staff | News & Events | About SE | Athletics | Directory | Quick Links | Give To SE | Apply Now | Graduate Studies

You are here: Home / Job Postings / Faculty Positions Available / Assistant Professor of Spanish (English, Humanities & Languages)

Employment Opportunities

Assistant Professor of Spanish (English, Humanities & Languages)

Southeastern Oklahoma State University's Department of English, Humanities and Languages invites applications for a tenure-track Assistant Professor position in Spanish with a background in (or ability to teach courses in) World Literature, Humanities, and/or Writing classes. Online teaching experience required. Quality Matters certification preferred. The candidate must be willing to teach a variety of classes in Spanish, English, and Humanities.

Founded in 1909, Southeastern enrolls approximately 3,900 students in 38 undergraduate and 14 graduate degree programs. The university is located in southeast Oklahoma, approximately 90 miles from the Dallas Metro area. The community is close to Lake Texoma and the Choctaw Casino Resort.

Salary will be commensurate with qualifications and experience. The preferred start date is August 1, 2018, and may require multiple campus assignments as well as varied time and delivery methods. Review of applications will begin April 1, 2018 and continue until the position is filled.

Employment is contingent upon the results of a national criminal and sex offender background check. Candidates must be eligible to work in the United States. Prior to issuing a letter of appointment, official transcripts must be received directly from each degree-granting institution by the Office of Academic Affairs. To apply send a completed application for faculty employment, letter of application, curriculum vitae, unofficial transcripts or e-copies from each institution of higher education attended to:

Southeastern Oklahoma State University

Human Resources, Administration Building 309

425 W. University Blvd. Durant, OK 74701, or email to hr@se.edu

SE is an EEO employer committed to multicultural diversity.

SE participates in E-Verify. www.se.edu

Southeastern Oklahoma State University, in compliance with all applicable federal and state laws and regulations, does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, sex, age, disability, sexual orientation, gender identity, or status as a veteran in any of its policies, practices, procedures, or programs. This includes, but is not limited to: admissions, employment, financial aid, and educational services. Inquiries regarding non-discrimination and equity policies may be directed to: Michael Davis, Director of Compliance and Safety & Title IX Coordinator, (580) 745-3090, or mdavis@se.edu, Administration Building Room 311 – 425 W. University Blvd. Durant, OK 74701.

CONTACT HUMAN RESOURCES

For more information regarding a specific position or how to apply for a position please contact: Jennifer Moore jmoore@se.edu Tel: 580-745-2490

BACKGROUND CHECK

Employment is contingent upon the results of national criminal and sex offender background checks.

CLERY ACT

Campus Crime Statistics The Campus Police Department reports Clery Act campus crime statistics at Southeastern on their website for your review (in compliance with the Jeanne Clery Disclosure of Campus Crime Statistics Act).